When Burruss Corprew, foreman, replied "Not guilty" to the question propounded by the clerk a tense silence lasting about a minute ensued. It was broken by a sob, the heart cry of a woman. The young wife of the prisoner whose bravery and fortitude throughout the trial had challenged the admiration of all connected with and attendant upon the trial, had given way to her pent-up emotions.

With a cry of mingled anguish and joy, she threw her arms about her husband and then shook hands fervently with his counsel Judge Thomas H. Willeox, Judge Waddill, who presided, and the jurors who had but a moment ago made it possible for Nock to leave the courtroom a free man.
